

Module 8 Explanations

I re-organized my folders for our class projects into three folders for now, with the ability to add more folders for later projects. The folders are for projects one, two, and three, big projects, and website design steps. Since much of the class in the near future is going to be designing and building our website, I think this folder is very useful and flexible. It is divided into subfolders based on a timeline of design development, with folders for hand sketches, web sketches, and Photoshop designs.

Overall, I just wanted to make my folders chronological in terms of design choices, and make it easy to find big projects when I need to. The reasoning for this is that I probably will not have to find specific modules in the future while designing my site, but I will want to be able to find specific steps in my website design process. By building a website design steps folder and dividing it into the definitions of the sketches, I make it easy to find which step of the design process I was looking for. In addition, by creating an explanations folder, I can easily recall my reasoning for each step in the process.
